

I then asked him if he ever took walks away from home out around North Plainfield after his release from this hospital in 1922, and he said that he had. I asked him if he could recall being lots on Clinton Avenue, North Plainfield, and asking the direction to the Parker House. He could not remember asking the direction to the Parker House, but he did remember going to some people's home, and they were not friendly to him. I asked him what he meant by the fact that they were not friendly to him, and he stated that at times when he felt sick, and thought he was going to throw a fit, he would go to some house and the people would ask him in, as most everyone knew him, but these people did not ask him, so he figured they were unfriendly to him. I asked him if he had any relations or friends named Parker and he said that he had none. He then mentioned the Park Hotel in Plainfield and said that that place is sometimes called the Parker House, but that he knew where that was and would not have to ask anyone the direction to that. I then showed him a picture of Willie Stevens cut from the newspaper, and told him that he resembles Willie. He looked the picture over. I then showed the picture to the doctor and he could see the same resemblance. About this time Mr. Manley started to tell me that Willie Stevens does not stand up straight, and that he does. Mr. Manley then straightened up to show me, and suddenly took one of his fits and fell to the floor. The back of his head struck a table
